

Soren and Akiko's Silver Song

In the hollow of a Great Oak, Soren the owl was trying to sleep. But the sun was too bright and the forest was too noisy.
"Hoot-hoot," she sighed, tucking her head under a soft wing to hide from
.the light

Down on the mossy ground, Akiko the squirrel was very busy.

He was looking for acorns to snack on, but instead, he found something that shimmered under a leaf.

It was a tiny, silver whistle shaped like a
.star

Akiko scurried up the tree to Soren's hollow as fast as his little paws could go. "Look, Soren!" he chattered. Soren opened one big, golden eye. The whistle sparkled so brightly that it made .her blink Soren leaned closer to sniff the cold metal.

"This belongs to Vega, the Mountain Keeper," she whispered. "Without it, she cannot call the morning mist. We must take it back to the High Peaks before the sun
".goes down

The journey was very long for a small squirrel. Akiko had to hop over a bubbling brook, leaping from stone to stone. The water went splash-splash-splash, but Akiko's feet stayed dry and fast as he held the treasure tight

Soon, the forest ended and the path grew steep and rocky. Akiko reached up, but the ledge was much too high for him to climb. Soren flew down and offered her strong wing. "Hold on tight, Akiko!" she said

At the very top of the mountain, the air was cold and everything was quiet. Soren landed on a jagged rock and looked around at the clouds.

"Vega?" she called out into the wind. "Are you here? We found "!something for you

A small, silver bird named Vega fluttered out from behind a large snowdrift. She looked very sad. Her feathers were the color of moonlight, but she was silent. Her song was missing because her
.whistle was gone

The sun began to set, turning the sky a beautiful pink and orange. Soren and Akiko sat together on the peak, watching the mist roll over the forest. They were very tired, but they were happy to be the .best of friends
